

Lovers in a Dangerous Time - Synopsis

REGULAR SHORT SYNOPSIS:

"Lovers in a Dangerous Time" is about the solace found in childhood love. Todd Timmins (the boy that stayed) and Allison Adamson (the girl that left) are two former childhood friends that are reunited at their high school reunion. Being around each other again triggers all the regrets of growing older, all the fears and pain they've held since youth and the longing to just escape from all of it. To further complicate matters they have feelings for each other that are lost somewhere between sharing a bathtub at three, teenage angst and their adult fear of commitment. Their only refuge is to hang on to their youth for as long as they can.

SHORTENED ALTERNATIVES:

FOLLOW - Todd and Allison on their romantic yet dangerous journey from being reunited at their ten year high school reunion, to sorting out what it means to have shared a bathtub together at three, where raging brotherly feuds, teenage bush parties and childhood memories only delay their impending return to adulthood. (But don't think they'll go without a fight!)
