Full Synopsis:

In the ice cold white of winter, a group of survivors is trapped inside a suburban house. With the power out, no running water, and food running low, the situation is grim.

The house is surrounded by creatures that used to be human, but have changed into something else. How? Why? To step outside means certain death.

Zeke is found hanging from a tree in the backyard. The rest of the survivors feel helpless and trapped. Mountain man William Winter arrives at the door. HE KNOWS HOW TO NAVIGATE THE OUTSIDE WORLD, but doesn't plan on staying long. Hannah, another new arrival to the house brings fear and uncertainty.

The morning after Winter's arrival, Cindy is found murdered in the bathtub. The group asks Winter to find out who did it. Working the clues, evidence points everywhere. Jimmy, Becka, Lauren, Hannah, Derek and even Frankie had reasons to kill Cindy.

Winter and Frankie finally discover that Zeke couldn't have taken his own life and that he too was murdered. Both bodies had their tongues cut out.

At this point the entire social structure inside the house breaks down. The atmosphere becomes a fever pitch of paranoia and fear. People accuse each other and the group descends into madness, clinching Jimmy and eventually stabbing him to death in a group frenzy.

Winter and Frankie, who risked an excursion, return from next door with the knowledge of who the murderer is. Derek confesses and his true madness is revealed. He is sure the new world will embrace him, especially since he too can now navigate the outside thanks to Winter's teaching.

Derek springs his trap and creatures swarm the house, killing everyone except for Winter and Derek who have a final stand off. Derek, shot and bleeding, will escape deeper into the suburbs finding more victims to silence. Winter, barely alive, tells Derek he is going to kill him. Derek responds, "Come catch me."
